ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

See How the ancient Spaniards hunted bulls on horseback in the countryside.

This scene is the preparatory drawing for the print Capes another enclosed, which depicts a square enclosed by barriers with three figures depicted as three Mamluk soldiers in Napoleon's service during the War of Independence. According to Matilla, the strange pose of a kneeling Moor, similar to the prayer pose in a mosque, is striking at the moment when one of the figures is fighting a large, long, dark bull.

As Matilla explains, Goya depicts the Moors in clothing that does not correspond to the Middle Ages in which the action was supposed to take place, presenting them as imperial Turks. The garment has been criticised for being clearly anachronistic and reveals Goya's intention to remake the history of bullfighting from images he himself witnessed. One of the most interesting features of this scene is the presence of a burladero with spectators, as in the print The Moors are doing another bullfight in the bullring in their bathrobes.

The figures of the main characters are quite accurate, but the figures of some of the spectators behind the stage seem incomplete. Nevertheless, they play an important role in the composition of the series, especially in the modern scenography, as they give clues as to the artist's true position on this bullfighting festival. In addition, Goya used light to accentuate and give movement to the figures.

The composition was transferred to the engraving with hardly any modifications.
