HISTORIA

The drawing was inherited in 1828 by Javier Goya, the painter's son, and in 1854 by Mariano Goya y Goicoechea, the artist's grandson. It was subsequently owned by Valentín Carderera (ca. 1861) and Mariano Carderera (ca. 1880). In 1886 it was acquired from Mariano Carderera by the Directorate General of Public Instruction and was assigned to the Prado Museum, where it entered on 12 November 1886.

ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

See People in sacks.

This is another of the drawings traditionally ascribed to the series of preparatory works for the Follies, on the basis of their technical and compositional similarity and the paper used. However, it does not correspond to any of the prints in the engraved series.

The fantastic imagination here creates an enigmatic scene in which two figures approach a linteled door, or a kind of light box. The most significant element is Goya's extraordinary ability to depict the strong luminosity emanating from the door, simply by leaving the leaf blank in that area. Strangely, the two human figures are not bathed in its rays, but appear rather in backlighting.

The sketchy execution of the drawing does not allow us to discover any details that would reveal its exact meaning. For Camón Aznar, it is an illustration of a scene from Dante's Divine Comedy. Dante and his companion Virgil are supposedly standing before the gate of hell. Gassier, for his part, points out that the oblique position of the door does not correspond to real architecture and can be interpreted in any way.
