ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

See How the ancient Spaniards hunted bulls on horseback in the countryside

This picture narrates an episode of a mishap in the suerte de varas. In this case we see how the picador, on the back of his horse, is driving the pike into the bull, while the bull has thrown himself at the equine's neck and has one of his horns inside it. In addition, there are a series of peons who, with capes, urge the bull to break away, while another picador observes the scene and waits for the best moment to finish the job. The picador in the foreground, Rendón, whose chest almost touches the other side of the bull, is holding the stick tightly and the rest of the bullfighters are nervously taking the fight. It is a harsh scene of violence and a great deal of movement, which is conveyed not only through the figures in the foreground but also through the secondary figures in the background who jump over the barrier, either to enter the ring or to escape from it. The most outstanding light is in the central part of the scene, which cuts through the mass of spectators in the background, resolved in dark tones.

Glendinning relates the print, which is one of the few signed Bullfighting prints, to others that have characters with somewhat distorted faces, a feature that in his opinion implies a criticism of those who participate in one way or another in a bullfight, such as Martincho's recklessness in the bullring of Zaragoza, Another madness of his in the same bullring, Ceballos himself, mounted on another bull, breaking rejones in the bullring of Madrid, The fall of a picador from his horse under the bull, Fire bull or Two groups of bullfighters run over at once by a single bull.

Martínez-Novillo, for his part, relates the print thematically to the engravings Fall of a picador from his horse under the bull and Two groups of picadors run over at once by a single bull, to which he adds a third, Unfortunate charge of a powerful bull (Bullfighting B). He considers these works to be the culmination of what is captured in the present print. They are all violent and harsh scenes, works of both conceptual and plastic importance that had a notable influence on other artists such as Picasso, who ended up turning the bull into a true obsession.

In Matilla's view, the violence of the print is conceptually close to that of the Disasters of War. He also points out that once again we are dealing with the representation of the public as a mass and recalls that the fact of reflecting the death of two horses in the bullring also occurs in two other prints in the series, specifically in the aforementioned Fall of a picador from his horse under the bull and Two groups of picadors run over at once by a single bull.

There is a preparatory drawing of the present print, also entitled The hard-working Rendón stinging a bull whose fate killed him in the bullring in Madrid.
