HISTORIA

See*Sad presentiments of what must come to pass*.

There is a third artist's proof that predates the writing, burnishing and scratches in the sky. The number 27 already appears in the lower left-hand corner.

The title was handwritten on the print by Goya in the first and only series that is known to have been printed at the time the works were created, which the artist gave to his friend Agustín Ceán Bermúdez. Therefore, the title was etched into the plate at a later date and left unchanged as of the first edition of the Disasters of War printed by the San Fernando Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Madrid in 1863, after the printing of the series in the possession of Ceán Bermúdez.

There is no surviving preparatory drawing of this print.

ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

Goya ups the rhythm of The Disasters of War in this print with the depiction of a scene imbued with a strong, dramatic intensity that contrasts with the calm of previous prints in the series, which featured wounded people being assisted or corpses. The work shows the interior of a cave where various figures are going to be executed. On the left, a woman prostrates herself face down on the floor with her hands clasped on her head, while another covers her face and in front of them yet another woman stretches out her arms, her chest thrust out towards the enemy. In the middle of the composition there is a figure covered from head to foot holding a child in their arms. By their side is a kneeling man who brings his hands together in a gesture of prayer. In the centre of the foreground, another man begs for this torment to end. As in the case of print no. 15, And it can't be helped, here we see only the very ends of the bayonets that appear in a row in the right-hand side of the print.

The French soldiers are at the mouth of the cave where they have surprised the Spanish people they are about to execute. Once again, as in the case of other prints in this series, what should be a place of shelter that protects man has become a trap. The cave is a place that has hidden these people from their enemy for some time but has now become a dead end with no escape route. The short distance between the French and the Spanish figures means that they have to look at each other face-to-face.

The most striking figure in the print is the woman at the centre of the composition: facing death, she displays her torso, spreading out her arms in the form of a cross. This gesture is echoed in the central figure in the print*Third of May 1808*, who also wears a white shirt.

CONSERVACIÓN

The plate is stored in the National Chalcography (cat. 277).
